

Starlite Recovery Center Announces New Medical Director, Dr. Bryan M. Davis, D.O., MSPH

Board certified physician has particular interest in the effective treatment of alcoholism and opioid addiction, as well as researching relapse prevention

Center Point Tex. (PRWEB) October 07, 2013

Starlite Recovery Center, the longest running free-standing chemical dependency treatment center in Texas, has announced the appointment of Bryan M. Davis, D.O., MSPH, to Medical Director. Dr. Davis is a Board Certified family medicine physician and a diplomate of the American Board of Family Medicine. He has clinical and leadership experience in Arizona and Texas, serving as both a professional addiction medicine consultant and medical director.

“We are very pleased to welcome Dr. Davis to our talented team at Starlite,” said Amy Swetnam LPC, LCDC, CEAP, LAP-C, and Executive Director. “Dr. Davis’ vast experience and focus on individualized clinical treatment will be of great benefit to our patients and families.”

Dr. Davis graduated from the University of Texas at Austin and worked as a chemical engineering consultant in Texas and Louisiana before obtaining a Masters degree in Toxicology and Risk Assessment from Tulane School of Public Health and Tropical Medicine. He continued his work at Tulane University in partnership with the CDC Research Center as a research toxicologist and epidemiologist. After being awarded his medical degree from the Arizona College of Osteopathic Medicine, Dr. Davis completed his residency training from Scott & White in Temple, Texas.

It was through his research and clinical work that Dr. Davis became interested in working with individuals and families affected by the disease of addiction.

“Effective treatment for addiction must address co-occurring disorders and recognize an individual’s strengths in order to prevent relapse and achieve lasting recovery,” says Dr. Davis. “I am delighted to join Starlite Recovery Center with the shared belief in a comprehensive, evidence-based, and multidisciplinary integrated approach to treatment.”

Dr. Davis has a particular interest in the effective treatment of alcoholism and opioid addiction, as well as researching relapse prevention.
